THE INAUGURATION.

Abraham Lincoln President of the United States.

Scenes and Incidents of the Day—The Inaugural Address—Its Reception—Mr. Seward in the Cabinet—A Speech from Mr. Seward—A Brief Address by Mr. Lincoln.

[Correspondence of the Evening Post.]

WASHINGTON, March 4, 1861.

The ceremony is over. Abraham Lincoln is the President-elect of the United States. No excess of disturbance has marred the pleasure of the day, our chieftain of disunion followed the leading of the new administration.

Mr. Lincoln, always an early riser, was up at five o'clock this morning, took a cursory breakfast, and immediately afterwards made a final revision of his inaugural address. He subsequently had an interview with Mr. Seward, but denied himself to all other visitors. In the meantime there was a busy hum of preparation for the imposing ceremonies of the day. The streets were filled with eager throngs, all waiting with ill-concealed anxiety for the decisive moment. Everybody seemed in the best of humor. Many appeared to have laid aside the suspicion of yesterday and met on the footing of friends equally interested in the event which was about to take place. The arrangements for the march to the Capitol were completed at an early hour, and the line was formed soon after eleven o'clock. A few minutes before noon Mr. Buchanan entered the premises at the White House, accompanying a handsome carriage, out of which the President was then released. On reaching Willard's Hotel, the line halted to receive Mr. Lincoln, who came out of the hotel arm-in-arm with Mr. Buchanan, and the procession again moved towards the Capitol. The scene now became intensely exciting. Thousands of windows, decorated and enthusiastic, lined the route, and cheers burst roaringly forth as the President-elect came into view. The slowest order was preserved; and even if disturbances had occurred, the excellent arrangements of the Marshal Jones—high and low, made by General Scott—would well nigh prevent any serious consequences. Efforts to quell them in an instant. There was, however, no indication of a desire to create ill-feeling, and hence no grounds for apprehension.

The arrangements at the Capitol were completely thereby before 1 o'clock Vice-President Breckinridge entered the Senate chamber on his arm with the Vice-President-elect. After a brief farewell address from Mr. Breckinridge, the oath was administered to Mr. Hamlin, and the Senate waited in silence for the arrival of the President-elect. As the diplomatic corps entered the chamber, followed at a short interval by the Justices of the Supreme Court, the Cabinet, Senators, Members, and then the members of the House of Representatives came in a body. Soon after one o'clock Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Lincoln made their appearance, walking arm-in-arm. Taking seats in front of the desk of the President of the Senate, the outgoing and incoming Executives sat silently awaiting the next movement in the drama. The contrast between them was curious. Mr. Buchanan looked pale, and sitting like a Stoic, regardless of the thousands of eyes so earnestly fixed upon him. Mr. Lincoln, slightly nervous and considerably flabby, occasionally heaved a gentle sigh, and seemed weary and disheartened. The eyes at this moment was peculiarly striking. The floor of the Senate Chamber presented a brilliant appearance. The diplomatists were in the full blaze of orders and decorations; the Supreme Judges preserved all the dignity of judicial dress and the gravity befitting the occasion; the members of both Houses of Congress were present in full force; the galleries were respondent with the gorgeous toilettes of the women who had gathered to accord public recognition to their husbands and the best order prevailed in and about the chamber.

At half past one o'clock, all being ready for the ceremony of inauguration, the procession was formed and moved to the east portico of the Capitol, in front of which a platform had been erected. Every available space in the vicinity was packed with a serious crowd of spectators. Everything being in readiness, Senator Baker, of Oregon, came forward and introduced Mr. Lincoln in the simple words: "Fellow-citizens: I introduce to you Abraham Lincoln, the President-elect of the United States of America." Mr. Lincoln was received to a small table, which had been placed for his accommodation, and proceeded to deliver his inaugural address, every word of which was distinctly heard on the outskirts of the swaying crowd. The sale of the address was commenced by Mr. Lincoln by Chief Justice Taney; the process-sion was again formed, Mr. Lincoln was escorted to his House, and was duly installed in the office of President of the United States.

THE INAUGURAL.

So ended the ceremonies of inauguration. You have already had the opportunity of passing judgment upon the Inaugural Address. Its effect here has been satisfactory. Members and parties unite in pronouncing it an able document, calculated to be very determinate in the cause of loyalty to the Union and the Constitution, and exceedingly conservative in its discussion of the great national questions which now agitate the country.

It is understood that the Address was printed before Mr. Lincoln left Springfield, but it has been subjected to frequent and careful revisions since his arrival at the capital, in order that the principles of the policy of the new administration might be thoroughly in accordance with the tendency of current events. I have, moreover, been informed, that it was not made up to Sunday night, Mr. Lincoln making his own amendments to what had by other counsel than his own judgment of the exigencies of the public service, been prepared. However, at the Sunday night at the Office was submitted to Mr. Seward, at his own request, for the reason that, as a prominent officer of the incoming Administration, it was essential that he should be placed in full possession of the line of policy which was to be inaugurated.

Mr. Seward highly approved the tone and language of the Address, especially the part recommended on one or two passages which he considered susceptible of a harsh interpretation. In accordance with his suggestions these passages were toned down, and the work was then declared complete.

A friend of another gentleman who has also been invited into the Cabinet subsequently waited upon Mr. Lincoln to learn if that gentleman could count on the contents of the Address. Mr. Lincoln replied emphatically, but in the true Jackson-like spirit, that his officers were appointed to perform the executive duties of the several departments of the Administration; that the policy of the Government was to be determined by the President himself. This reply affords another indication of the decisive and self-reliant spirit which Mr. Lincoln brings to the discharge of his high duties.

MR. SEWARD IN THE CABINET.

I learn from authentic sources that the parts of Mr. Seward in the Cabinet, which I gave in my letter of last night, were in accordance with the facts. He will be the leading member of the Cabinet, and, in the absence of the President, will be the chairman of the Cabinet. Mr. Seward is a man of great ability, and, if he will be true to his own and every section, and every citizen; that he will defend and protect the rights and interests, the peace and the prosperity, of all the states equally and alike, and that he will practise the moderation that springs from virtue, and the self-control that arises from patriotism in confederated states.

"Under his guidance, and with the blessing of God, I believe and trust, and confidently expect, that an administration that is inaugurated amid some distrust and painful apprehension, will close upon a prosperous, renewed, prosperous, free and happy republic. The state of New York, the greatest and most powerful of the states, will lead all other states in the way of conciliation, and in the path of wisdom always the path of peace, so I am sure that ere we shall finish the work of constitution in the way of wisdom."

MR. LINCOLN'S FIRST STEPS AFTER THE INAUGURATION.

After the ceremonies of inauguration Mr. Lincoln was chiefly busy in conversing with the Republican New Yorkers, among whom were Thurlow Weed, Judge Selden, Thomas Cornell, Daniel D. Conover, Peter Cooper, and others. The party was introduced by Stewart L. Woodford, and Mr. Lincoln responded in these words:

"Fellow-citizens: I thank you for this visit. I have no speech to make to you. I have no inaugural speech, but that you come without distinction of party, I take your presence to be a good sign for the United States. I am informed that you have come from the Empire State. (Cheers.) Of "All," "All?" You all appear to be very friendly. May I take the pleasure of introducing to I have this day given to my sentiments many times before in some degree, and I will not repeat them. (Emphatic exclamations of assent.) As I look at an audience, the like of which I have not seen since of every section shall have no cause to complain of the inauguration. (Cries of good.) Good? As towards the disaffected portion of our fellow-citizens, I will say, as every good man has said throughout the country, that there will be no force unless force is used against the United States. I hope it will not come to that. I hope it will have gone and over the nearly ordained. We do not, my friends, want to be enemies. We must not be enemies. We cannot be enemies for the severity of my remarks, I am sure, will be remembered, I will not repeat them, dwelling on the pleasant feature of this occasion, I will say, that I hope, and I believe, that the feeling which now exists between the North and the South, and which has existed between the East and the West, will not be broken, but the reunion of which they have been, which they will become entitled to, recover their place in the sisterhood. (Cheers.) I hope it will be so. I can see no reason why it should not be so. I can see no reason why it should not be so. I can see no reason why it should not chamber.

At half-past one o'clock, all being ready for the ceremony of inauguration, the procession was returned and proceeded to the east portico of the Capitol, in front of which a platform had been erected. Every available space in the vicinity was packed with a curious crowd of spectators. The following being in readiness, Senator Baker, of Oregon, came forward and introduced Mr. Lincoln, in the simple words: "Fellow-citizens: I introduce to you Abraham Lincoln, the President-elect of the United States of America." Mr. Lincoln was received in a small table, which had been placed for his accommodation, and proceeded to deliver his inaugural address, every word of which was distinctly heard on the outskirts of the swarming crowd. The oath of office was then administered to Mr. Lincoln by Chief Justice Taney; the procession was again formed, Mr. Lincoln was escorted to the White House, where he was installed in the office of President of the United States.

THE INAUGURAL.

So ended the ceremonies of inauguration. You have already had the opportunity of passing judgment upon the inaugural address. Its effect here has been exhaustive. All shades of parties unite in pronouncing it an able document, calm in its tone, determined in its purpose and loyalty to the Union and the Constitution, and assuming no quarter in its discussion of the great national questions which now agitate the country.

It is understood that the Address was printed before Mr. Lincoln had been sworn and had been subjected to frequent and careful revisions since his arrival at the capital, in order that the declaration of the policy of the new administration might be thoroughly in accordance with the tendency of current events. I learn, moreover, that it was submitted to no one up to Sunday night. Mr. Lincoln making his own amendments unaided by other counsel than his own judgment of the exigencies of the public service. On Monday morning, however, the final copy of the Address was submitted to Mr. Seward, at his own request, for the reason that, as a prominent officer of the incoming Administration, it seemed essential that he should be placed in full possession of the line of policy which was to be inaugurated.

Mr. Seward highly approved the tone and language of the address, suggesting only a modification of one or two passages which he considered susceptible of a harsh interpretation. In accordance with his suggestions these paragraphs were toned down, and the work was then declared complete.

A friend of another gentleman who has also been invited into the Cabinet subsequently walked upon Mr. Lincoln, to say that that gentleman desired to know the counsels of the Address. Mr. Lincoln replied courteously, but in the strongest terms, that his officers were appointed to perform the executive duties of the several departments of the Administration; but that the policy of the government was to be determined by the Presidents himself. This reply affords another indication of the indomitable and self-reliant spirit which Mr. Lincoln brings to the discharge of his high duties.

AN ODYSSEY IN THE CAPITAL.

I learn from authentic sources that the reports of an attempt to remove Mr. Seward from the Cabinet are wholly unfounded. There may have been some opposition to his selection for the Sec'y ship of State, but, the appointment once made, it is therefore, destitute of truth. The rebuisna of Mr. Seward with all the Republicans are of the most cordial character, and his appointment to the leading position in the Cabinet is regarded with general satisfaction. The statesman of the Northern Capitol then Mr. Seward for the performance of the arduous duties which will fall to him in his new and responsible position, and the Northern cold could have an truer friend and counsellor than he.

MR. SEWARD AND THE NEW TORK DELEGATION.

This morning Mr. Seward made a brief speech to a delegation of some two hundred New Yorkers who called upon him at his residence. In response to a few words of cordial greeting he spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF MR. SEWARD.

"Friends, Fellow-Citizens and Neighbors: I am very deeply affected by this unexpected manifestation of affection on the part of the people of the state of New York. So many familiar faces, seen at this distance, so many long tried and valued friendships, such unbroken ties, are wholly beyond the ability to describe. It is just twelve years since I retired, with my family, from this place, to my home in the great state from which you have come in obedience to the call of my country. I have passed a series of twelve years—a period which is long in the concentration of the concentrated energy of the great contest which I have undergone—I have passed a voluntary exile, but, God be thanked, I have been as much at home in the state of New York—one of yourselves—your equal—no longer bearing the responsibilities of a representative. (Here one of the Engine Marshals stepped forward, and placed his badge on Mr. Seward's coat, amid great cheering.) My friend, I will carry this badge with me, and, in the hour of my trial, I will call upon you, and, in the hour of your trial, I will be with you. Well, I have been, in the interval, from all the more of good and evil that attends mortal life.

Here in this presence, before you, I feel obligation to the Almighty Power which has kept me in the service of the God who is to our Common Judge, I do not feel that I have any other record of that record which I desire should be obliterated. Although I have been subjected to severe trials, I have been all the while conscious that I was also a special favorite of the Almighty Power, and I have felt that I was not ashamed to be a real citizen of a New York and of the United States. I have felt that I was not afraid to appeal to every vote—no matter how, in the West, to the Indian, to the Mexican, to the Spaniard, to every state in every zone, and to every man, to every woman, to every human being, from the cradle to the sepulchre, to say whether, in my word or deed of action, I have ever, in the least degree, violated the Constitution or violated the laws of the country. I have not, I am sure, I have not, I am sure, I have not, I am sure,

"The great drama now in progress in the United States of America is the text of all conversations in the political circles of Madrid. The opinion is that two countries, England and Spain, are specially interested in the revolution in the Western Republic. In a commercial point of view, American events will effect considerably England more than those of any other nation; but in a political point of view, Spain is the country which is exhibiting most the social and political conditions of the American people, and the avuncular ties which bind the Spanish colonies to the Mother Country. The Anglo-Saxon race, settled upon the soil discovered by Columbus and conquered by Spaniards, survives in a threatening ruin, and holds Dulcinea's wound and scars in the West Indies, but also over all the American continents where the language of Cervantes is spoken.

"The troubles now threatening the existence of the American Union are not subjects of grief to the people of Spain. Her political integrity, her interests of race, of religion, and her policy require that a step put to the progress of this rising people; for if it were proper to be pleased with other people's misfortunes, Spain would, perhaps, have reason to rejoice at what is happening on the other side of the Atlantic. Meanwhile the Spanish government intends to watch closely the Spanish provinces of America, not that they are now exposed to any risk whatever, but because a government has to foresee even when they are still far distant."

SENSIBLE TO THE LAST.

The following item appears this morning among the telegraphic despatches of the Associated Press:

"Judge Vondermeath, of Lancaster, Pa., has been pardoned by President Buchanan, and was liberated from the Eastern Penitentiary this morning. He was sentenced twenty years for embezzlement, and to pay a fine of $50,000. He had served eighteen months. The fine remains in the pardon. His crime was forging spoliations for land warrants."

Mr. Buchanan thus signalizes his final retirement from office by an act of mercy to a notorious criminal, keeping up to the last his proclivity to wink at sin in high places.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

Reception of the President's Inaugural Address.—The public anxiety to obtain the President's Inaugural Address yesterday afternoon was intense. The office of the EVENING POST was besieged by an eager crowd, as large, almost, as the army of the Southern Confederacy. They did not come, however, with hostile intentions, although, in their eagerness, they broke the panes of glass in the door, and endured many and severe struggles with each other to get the precedence. Nassau and Liberty streets were packed, on both sides of the office, and papers were sold over the counter and also from the windows on the Nassau street side, as rapidly as the press could turn them off. The purchasers, after getting their property, had to defend it and experienced quite a boisterous exercise in "reading" from the office with their prize.

Something about Quarrels in the Board of Aldermen.—There is something very fading out in the pomps and movements of our city fathers. For instance, since the contract of Mr. Barkley, for closing the streets, was confirmed, there should have been five meetings of the Aldermen. But instead of five there has been only one, a quorum not coming together. Last evening was the time for a regular session, but the President was not there, Mr. Fromont, having taken the Chair, ordered the roll-call, when it appeared that only five members, four less than a quorum, were present. Mr. Brady moved that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to go below and compel the absentees to attend members to be could find. The President, however, decided that they had no authority to compel attendance below, and that there was not a quorum present to act upon it. He would, however, direct the officer to go down and "request" such members as he could find to attend.

The Sergeant-at-Arms accordingly went out, and soon after returned, followed by four members, who made a quorum. The chair then proceeded to read the minutes of the previous meeting, but while this was going on three of the members who had just before entered slipped out, and the Aldermen, in the case of the chair, being the remaining one demanded a roll of the house, when, of course, it was manifest there was no quorum. Thereupon the President declared that the Board stood adjourned.

During all these proceedings, several members were in the vestibule of the City Hall, below, well aware that there was no quorum. It is evident, in fact, that it was well understood by "the ring" that a meeting should not be held. There are certain politicians whom we have seen, yesterday of late, whether there will be a quorum of the Aldermen on the next meeting night, but one gentleman gave the cause of "no quorum" a long time without because. "We vote."

The Board of Councilmen were also without a quorum last night, the President and several members having gone to Washington.

Suicide of a German Editor.—Carsten Schirmer held an unpaid bill last morning, at No. 313½ Marion street, on the body of Ferdinand Hofhauer, a German, twenty-nine years of age, who committed suicide on Saturday or Sunday last.

Hofhauer, who came to this country two years ago, was a man of superior education, having taken the degree of Doctor of Jurisprudence in Germany, and he has published several works which are highly commended. Since his residence in this city he has been a contributor to the Demokrat and several other periodicals, and within the past week had accepted the editorship of a German newspaper, to be called the New Yorker Phoenix. Owing to the difficulty in raising the funds necessary for the project, the publication has been delayed, and Hofhauer, becoming dependent, committed suicide by inhaling charcoal fumes.

From our Third Edition of Yesterday.

BY TELEGRAPH.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS—Second Session.

MR. HAMLIN SWORN IN.

WASHINGTON, March 4, 1861.

Senate.

Mr. Hamlin then stepped forward and said:

"Senators: The experience of several years in this body enlights me something of the duties of the presiding officer, and with a stern, inflexible purpose to discharge these duties faithfully, relying upon the courtesy and co-operation of senators, and invoking the aid of Divine Providence, I am now ready to take the oath required by the statutes, and to enter upon the discharge of the official duties assigned to me by the confidence of a generous people."

Mr. Hamlin took the oath as follows:

"I, Hannibal Hamlin, do solemnly swear to support the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. Breckinridge said:

"Having now arrived at the termination of this Congress, I now declare the Senate adjourned sine die."

Mr. Hamlin took the chair, and the proclamation for an extra session was read.

SUPPOSED MURDER IN NEWARK.

NEWARK, March 5.—Ann Carlton, living at No. 46 Monroe street, thirty-five years old, was found dead in her bed at midnight, with marked violence. A row occurred there last night; the parties are under arrest, and the coroner's inquest is progressing.

MISCELLANEOUS DESPATCHES.

BOSTON, March 5.—A salute of thirty-four guns was fired here to day at noon, under the direction of the proprietors of the Herald and other newspaper, in honor of the inauguration of President Lincoln and Vice President Hamlin.

St. Louis, March 5.—Luther J. Green, Commissioner from Oregon, delivered a strong secession speech before a Joint Session of the legislature last night.

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

The Blankman Will Case.

This case was continued in the Surrogate's Court this morning, by the examination of John H. Peck, a brother of the deceased Jane A. Blankman. He testified that the signature to the will was not her handwriting. He also testified respecting a conversation held with Blankman as to whether she had left a will; Mr. Blankman told him that his sister kept her private papers in a trunk, and that he would not find it, and that he would be subsequently, by appointment, with other witnesses, to Blankman's house, and was shown a box which, upon examination, was found to contain no will. The examination was not concluded to-day.

The Weike Court-Martial.

The Naval Court-Martial re-assembled this morning at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Capsule Weike's defence was nearly concluded. As the proceedings of the court are almost finished, we will probably be enabled to publish the particulars of the trial to-morrow.

City Mortality.—The City Inspector reports for the week ending yesterday deaths as follows: From acute disease, 107; chronic disease, 156; external causes, 4o; 40; total, 40; an increase of thirteen over the number for the previous week.

Judge Bosworth, of this city, has arrived in North Carolina, and indulgence from him states that he is in good health.

LEGAL RECORD.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

BEFORE SUTHERLAND, J.

The Chase Bribery Corpus-Proceedings.

Matter of the Habeas Corpus of Lucius W. Chase.—This case has been heretofore stated in the Record. Judge Sutherland gave up a decision of the Justice Leonard had made. The relator was charged with bribing a crimer (false pretenses) in the District of Columbia.

Justice Leonard discharged the prisoner, but he was immediately taken into custody by the United States Marshal.

The habeas corpus was directed to the United States Marshal, and now returned, the relator on his behalf, claiming a warrant for his arrest issued by Commissioner Bates.

Counsel contended that the prisoner had committed no crime against the United States for which he could be held.

His honor adjourned the case until Wednesday next.

The Cheap Habeas Corpus—Postponement.

Matter of the Habeas Corpus of Burgess H. Chap.—This case has been heretofore stated in the Evening Post, it coming up on a habeas corpus before Justice Leonard last week. The prisoner was charged with committing a crime (false pretences) in the Southern of Connecticut.

It was contended that discharged the prisoner, and he was accordingly taken into custody by the United States Marshal.

This habeas corpus was directed to the United States Marshal, who was ordered to produce the prisoner, being detained by him under a warrant for his arrest issued by Commissioner Gardner.

Counsel considered that the prisoner had committed no crime against the United States for which he could be held.

His honor adjourned the case until Wednesday next.
